A fresh crop: The scoop on TV’s new fall shows

By Kyla Brewer
TV Media

That magical time of year is almost here, and TV fans are in for some fresh treats at last. After months of reruns and binge watching, it’s finally time for new TV series to pop up in prime time. While there may not be as many productions as usual for this year’s fall TV harvest, there are still some choice offerings. Cable channels are ready to duke it out for ratings with their own original programming, and he major networks have secured a mix of dramas, a comedy and even a game show.

HBO will be out of the gate early with the premiere of “We Are Who We Are,” on Monday, Sept. 14. The drama from Luca Guadagnino (Call Me By Your Name,) examines modern teen angst set against the backdrop of an American military base in Italy in 2016. It stars Jack Dylan Grazer (“It,” 2017) as a shy teenager who moves from New York to the base.

AMC hopes to continue the success of its The Walking Dead franchise with “The Walking Dead: World Beyond,” scheduled to premiere Sunday, Oct. 4. The series had been slated to premiere in April, but AMC changed its plans when COVID-19 forced the industry-wide shutdown, opting instead to save it for its fall schedule. Set 10 years after the end of the apocalypse, the show follows sisters Iris (Aliyah Royale, “The Red Line”) and Hope (Alexa Mansour, “Loco Love”) and two friends who leave a place of safety on a quest.

There’s no doubt that the COVID-19 shutdown has had an impact on television productions, many of which were forced to close up shop in March. However, industry pundits remain optimistic, including the folks at Fox, who are planning to welcome three notable new series to their prime-time lineup this fall. “Now, more than ever, consistency, results and stability take on an all-new emphasis,” Fox executive vice president of daytime shows Shea Salazar (Fernanda Alos) said. “Whether we’re doing a new version, which follows three legitimate children. What’s worse, he wrote them into his will, threatening her hold on the family fortune. Fox’s thriller “Next” is set to premiere Monday, Oct. 5. It stars John Slattery (“Mad Men”) as Silicon Valley pioneer Paul LeBlanc. When he discovers that an artificial intelligence that he created could be a threat to the human race, he works alongside Homeland Cybersecurity agent Shea Salazar (Fernanda Arndt, “Stranger Things”) to stop it.

CBS has plans for two new series this fall — one comedy and one drama. Although neither has a concrete premiere date as of yet, the network’s “B Positive” is the only network television comedy scheduled to make its debut this fall. Chuck Lorre (“The Big Bang Theory”) and Marco Pennette (“Inconceivable”) serve as executive producers on the series about Drew (Thomas Middleditch, “Silicon Valley”), a newly divorced dad who discovers he needs a kidney transplant. Luckily, a woman from his past, Gina (Annaleigh Ashford, “Masters of Sex”), agrees to donate hers. None other than Queen Latifah (“Chicago,” 2002) helms a reboot of the classic TV series “The Equalizer” for CBS. She stars as Robyn McCall, a mysterious woman who uses her unique skill set to help those who have no one else to turn to in this reimagining of the show that ran from 1985 to 1989. As in the original series, the Equalizer, as McCall is known, is a vigilante for justice.

Chris Noth (“Law & Order”) and Lorraine Toussaint (“Orange is the New Black”) also star. At ABC, David E. Kelley (“ Ally McBeal”) has cooked up the thriller “Big Sky” based on the book “The Highway” by C.J. Box. Private detectives Cassie Dewell (Kyle Bunbury, “Pitch”) and Cody Hoyt (Ryan Philippe, “Cruel Intentions,” 1999) team up with Hoyt’s ex-wife, Jenny (Katheryn Winnick, “Vikings”), to investigate the disappearance of two sisters who were kidnapped by a truck driver on a remote highway in Montana.

ABC has the only game show on the network TV docket with “Supermarket Sweep,” a revival of the series that originally aired on American television in the 1960s. Leslie Jones (“Saturday Night Live”) hosts the new version, which follows three teams that use their knowledge of merchandise and grocery shopping prowess to win big prizes.

As with the CBS series, neither of ABC’s new offerings had confirmed premiere dates as of press time. Last but not least of the so-called Big Four networks is NBC with a sole new offering for fall. However, given its pedigree, the new series ought to have lots to offer. Fan favorite Christopher Meloni (“Oz”) reprises his role as Elliot Stabler from “Law & Order: Special Victims Unit” in the spinoff “Law & Order: Organized Crime,” which is also awaiting a premiere date. After a decade away, Stabler returns to the NYPD to lead a task force to take down New York’s crime syndicates.

WHAT’S NEW ON NETFLIX

“Away”
While many people may be joking about wanting to get on a spaceship to Mars in order to escape the chaotic state of the world right now, on Friday, Sept. 4, Netflix follows an international team of astronauts as they head off on their own mission to Mars in this series premiere. Hilary Swank (“Million Dollar Baby,” 2004) stars as American astronaut Emma Green. A former pilot in the navy and now the commander of the space mission, Emma is first and foremost a wife to her husband, Matt (Josh Charles, “The Good Wife”), and mother to her daughter, Lex (Talitha Bateman, “Love, Simon,” 2018). Unlike many space dramas that focus on various extraterrestrial creatures, “Away” focuses more on the struggles of maintaining interpersonal relationships, both between the crew members and within the families they leave behind.

WHAT’S NEW ON PRIME

“The Boys” Season 2
Billy Butcher (Karl Urban, “RED,” 2010), Hughie Campbell (Jack Quaid, “Rampage,” 2018), Frenchie (Tomer Capon, “Combat Medic”), Mother’s Milk (Laz Alonso, “The Mysteries of Laura”) and Kimiko (Karen Fukuhara, “Suicide Squad,” 2016) are back for another exciting season of this unique superhero series, premiering Friday, Sept. 4, on Prime. Season 1 brought viewers into a world where superheroes, aka “supes,” are revered by the public, but when Hughie’s girlfriend is accidentally killed by a team of famous superheroes known as the Seven, it becomes clear to him that these supes aren’t nearly as heroic as they lead people to believe. It’s soon revealed that the Seven work for a corporation called Vought, and saving people is far from their first priority. Upon learning all of this, Hughie teams up with Butcher, Frenchie, Mother’s Milk and Kimiko, a ragtag group of killers determined to bring down Vought and the Seven. Each member of the team has their own skillset and motivation for wanting to bring down the Seven — Kimiko was experimented on as part of an effort to create superpowered terrorists; Frenchie is a French weapons expert; Mother’s Milk is a mercenary; and Butcher is an assassin with a vendetta against Homelander (Antony Starr, “Outrageous Fortune”), the leader of the Seven, who he believes raped and killed his wife. Season 2 picks up after the epic Season 1 finale that changed everything, as it was revealed that Butcher’s wife is not only alive but raising a superpowered son.

Bring the beach home:
‘Cooking Out’ celebrates a summer tradition

By Michelle Rose
TV Media

Life ain’t exactly a beach in 2020. But if you’re in need of a mood-busting food experience right now, or if you’re craving some serious sea-soaked flavors, Food Network chef Michael Symon can show you how to enjoy a beach tradition without venturing far from home.

The Aug. 30 episode of “Symon’s Dinners Cooking Out” is one for shellfish eaters because it’s a celebration of the great American clambake tradition. Of course, given the pandemic-inspired “stay at home” message behind this self-shot series, you’re not going to see any beach shots of Symon digging a hole to cook in the sand. Instead, Symon will be firing up the grill in his own backyard, as he has for all previous episodes.

In “Clambake on the Grill,” Symon demonstrates how the secret to a successful clambake is good prep work, and then you can let the grill (and the foil) do the rest of the work for you. He’ll walk you through all the steps for preparing foil packets of clams with sausage and peppers, which are placed over coals and steamed. This is the same technique that’s used to prepare peaches with mascarpone and honey for dessert, and a refreshing sangria that completes this summer meal.

Clambakes are often associated with New England, since this modern beach cookout tradition originated in the region. Note the use of the word “modern”: that’s because beach cooking was a tradition in many Indigenous cultures long before first contact with European colonists.

But according to author Kathy Neustadt, the annual clambake tradition took root a few years after the American Revolution. It became wildly popular in the 1800s, when a different revolution, the Industrial Revolution, freed up more time for leisure activities like picnics. And now, the clambake is ingrained in New England culture, though other regions have put their own twist on it.

Given this history, you might be surprised to learn that clambakes are a big deal in Cleveland (and some would argue a bigger deal than on the East Coast). It’s actually a fall staple there, and during that time, it’s been said that more clams are shipped to Cleveland than any other city.

Symon hails from Cleveland, and the recipe he shares in the Aug. 30 episode of “Symon’s Dinner Cooking Out” is his own grill-friendly twist on the one-pot Cleveland clambake. It might not be a traditional recipe, but given that Labor Day is next weekend, it’s still a great way to enjoy summer flavors as we (gulp) inch closer to fall.

Expanding ‘Empire’: Possible spinoff in the works at Fox

By Michelle Rose
TV Media

Expanding ‘Empire’: Fox’s “Empire” may rise again after ending its six-season run earlier this year. But if it does, it will likely be in the form of a spinoff centered on Cookie Lyon, the label-founding matriarch played by actress Taraji P. Henson (“Hidden Figures,” 2016).

Henson, who won a Golden Globe and earned three Emmy nominations for the role, recently signed a two-year, first-look deal with 20th Century Fox TV. This possible spinoff — it’s still in the early stages of development — could be the first project under that deal and the first from Henson’s newly formed production company, TPH Entertainment, meaning Henson will both star in and produce the series.

There are few details about possible storylines beyond the official description that the series “follows what’s next for Cookie.” But we do know that “Empire” co-creator Danny Strong, who extended his own deal with the studio last year, will be involved as showrunner and writer alongside Stacy Littlejohn and Yolonda Lawrence. Veteran “Empire” director Sanaa Hamri will be involved as showrunner alongside Stacy Littlejohn and Yolonda Lawrence. Veteran “Empire” director Sanaa Hamri will be involved as showrunner alongside Stacy Littlejohn and Yolonda Lawrence.

More ‘Moody’s’: Get ready to spend more time with the Moody family, because Fox has renewed the Denis Leary-led series for a second season.

Viewers got to know the family last December when “The Moodys,” aired over three nights. Set in Chicago, the series focused on the holiday antics of a dysfunctional family. There was cantankerous daughter Dan, played by Francois Arnaud (“The Borgias”).

From the start, the network envisioned the “holiday event” as a possible launch for a series, just like the 2012 Australian special that inspired it. The event had so-so ratings, but Michael Thorn, president of entertainment for Fox Entertainment, was still open to a possible series renewal when he spoke with Deadline in January.

“Internally, it’s been one of the company’s favorite shows,” Thorn said. “The ratings were OK. We also went into it knowing that we’d never had original holiday programming during that time period, we tried something new and we were really pleased to get that cast. We’re having conversations right now about what another installment or season would look like. I don’t think we’ll know for a couple of weeks. It’s something that we’re really passionate about.”

A couple of weeks turned out to be a couple of months, but Season 2 of “The Moodys” is now officially on the way. No word yet on the number of episodes that will air, but instead of the holidays, this installment will shift the focus to the family’s everyday lives.

A possible premiere date hinges on how TV and film productions resume after the production shutdown. But for now, you can tentatively expect Season 2 of “The Moodys” to debut sometime in the 2020-21 season.

It’s also worth noting that the renewal announcement came on the heels of Leary’s own development and the still-living-at-home eldest son, Sean Jr., played by Jay Baruchel (“How to Train Your Dragon,” 2000); overachieving Bridget, played by Chelsea Frei (“Side-swiped”); and “the creative one,” son Dan, played by Francois Arnaud (“The Borgias”).

It’s also worth noting that the renewal announcement came on the heels of Leary’s own development deal with Fox via his production company, Amoeba. In the official statement, Leary quipped: “Everyone at Amoeba is excited about this partnership and we look forward to creating new, cutting-edge content at Fox, as well as using their luxury suites for World Series games and the Super Bowl.”
